

The upper and lower deck are operationally self contained. Here on the lower deck pulsating with unbelievable force are the great atomic motors that will power the ship to new worlds. Spectacular but functional living quarters, including staterooms and galley complete this level.

There is one additional member of this expedition--an environmental control Robot, key among whose many vital functions will be the final analysis of the physical environment of the new planet.

This historic flight, preceded by nearly a decade of intensive research, has been shrouded by the most rigorous security precautions. Other nations in even more desperate need for breathing room on our critically crowded planet, are racing the United States in this project...countries that would go to any lengths of sabotage!