drive-in restaurant in Santa Monica. Producer Jimmy Harris approached her and asked if she would like to tryout for "Lolita."

At first she thought he was kidding, but after checking Harris' background, she read for the part. She didn't get the role, but Producer Harris can be credited for starting Marta on a Hollywood career. He placed her in the hands of an actor's agent who immediately got her a featured role in "The Loretta Young Show."

Although Marta loves living in Los Angeles, she considers her Dad's five-acre spread in Farmington, Michigan her real home. The oversized estate has a swimming pool and four acres of woods which she "loves to walk or camp alone."

Her father has been a professor of philosophy at Wayne University for the past 37 years. His recent book, "The Person and Education" is used in teacher's colleges all over the United States.

Her brother, Dan, an Air Force private, was also adopted at an early age, and plans to enroll at Wayne College after he is discharged.

Marta's ambition is to be "a real good actress. I know I can act. I used to sit on a bus all day and study people, then try to emulate them. With a few years' experience, I think I will be a good actress. I know by studying people I will become a better person."

Her favorite actor and actress are Burt Lancaster and Ingrid Bergman.

Marta wants success, but her marriage to Terence Treadwell, a student at San Fernando State College, has become the most important thing in her life. The couple met at the beach in the summer of 1963 when Terence volunteered to teach Marta how to surf. Although the young actress was an excellent surfer, in true female form she allowed the attractive young man to show her the rudiments of the sport. They were married six months later, on January 25, 1964, in Las Vegas. They live in a lovely apartment in Santa Monica and Marta says she has learned "economy and cooking, in that order."
